An open letter to Sandra: Dear Sandra, many people will never know that within that unassuming persona of yours were many wonderful qualities. For instance: you never bragged about how smart you were. You carried a wealth of knowledge up there in that brain. You were an educated young lady, who took your training in the medical arena very seriously. You took care of several sick and shut ins. You knew what you were doing, and you were appreciated. You had a kind heart, and out of your meager funds, you did help others. You believed in cleanliness and neatness. Most of all, you were a kind soul. You believed in living and let live. You never judged others. You had a beautiful sense of humor. And yes, you and your dear friend, Cookie, lived a night out at Bingo. Good clean fun. With all your ailments, you never complained. Those who knew and loved you, will surely miss you. RIP Ms. Rabbit. No more pain, no more meds, no more discomfort.
